DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Always in immaculate condition this large Victorian house is in a most imposing location on Washington Avenue and is now a Tourist Home.

The Stam House, now Hill's Tourist Home, is situated on a large lot and back from the street. It is a large frame 2½ storey Victorian dwelling sitting on a low brick foundation. Built on a three sided cross gable plan with a tower centrally located in the main house, the house now has two additions to the rear. The roof of the entire house is of composition shingles. The central tall chimney has recessed panels, a multilayered cap and is unaltered.

The Washington Avenue, or east, facade is hidden somewhat behind trees and bushes. At the SE end is the front gable with brackets supporting the cornice. In the gable is a Palladian motive window. Directly below it are two 2/2 double hung shuttered windows, and below them a projecting bay composed of three elongated 2/2 windows, panels below each and dentials on the bay cornice. Continuing north on the east facade, one views the tower section which is recessed from the afore-described gable. The 4 storey tower has a mansard roof covered with diamond shaped composition shingles and also has a wooden cap. It is broken in the center on all four sides by a pediment housing a triangular shaped window with a curved bottom. In the third level of the tower are two 2/2 double hung windows directly next to each other. There is a small hood over these windows. Directly below is another set of two 2/2 shuttered windows with a small hood. The first floor contains a double door with stained glass side lights and transom. There is a one storey front porch reaching from the extended gable to the north side. The porch cornice is bracketed and has only sporting posts, which are also bracketed. The side of the north gable follows and has a plain box cornice. An arched window, 1/1, is on the second level and the first floor is unbroken.

The north gable cornice is bracketed and contains an arched window. There are two 1/1 shuttered windows to the west on the second level, one arched window possibly on a staircase (mid level) to the east, and a projecting bay again to the west on the first floor. The bay is like that of the east facade. The north facade of the tower, on the 3rd level, has a rectangular 1/1 window with hood. From the north one also views the two wings. The first attached to the house is a lower 2½ storey wing with A roof. Directly next to the main house the roof of the wing has been raised for a flat headed window, 6/6. To the west on the second floor is another 6/6 window, shuttered. The first floor has a shed type roof as it is built out. It contains, from l to r, a small 6/6 window, door, and larger 6/6 window. The 1½ storey addition, continuing west, has a stuccoed chimney rising from its far west roof, and a 6/6 window on the north side.

The southern facade with its A roof is broken by a bracketed pediment housing an arched window. The cornice of the remaining roof is without brackets or decoration. This facade is four bays wide. On the second floor are four 2/2 double hung and shuttered windows with hoods, again small. The first floor also has four 2/2 double hung and shuttered windows with the central two having elongated shutters and panels below them suggesting they may have been entrances to and from the one storey full side porch. The porch cornice and supporting posts are bracketed. The southern side of the first wing contains two 6/6 double hung and shuttered windows on each floor. The small rear addition has one 4/4 window. The triangular window with curved bottom in the tower pediment is barely visible.

The west view is one of gables, three in fact. The smallest wing gable has a paneled door and 6/6 double hung window. The 2½ storey wing gable is unbroken. To the north of these gables, below the plain box cornice of the roof of the north gable, is one 2/2 double hung shuttered window with hood on each floor. To the south of the two wing gables is the gable of the main house with its bracketed cornice and a rectangular 2/2 window. Both second and first floors have 2/2 double hung shuttered windows with hoods. Only the triangular shaped window with curved bottom in the tower pediment is visible.
